Cooperative Brands

Preface

Data for this report were collected from a questionnaire mailed to cooperatives asking them to participate in the revised publication, Cooperative Brands of Processed Foods. The questionnaire was mailed to dairy and processed foods cooperatives included in the previous directory. The survey was expanded to include regional supply cooperatives, fresh fruit and vegetable cooperatives with sales greater than $19,999,000 in 1987, and cooperatives included in Directory of U.S. Agricultural Cooperative Exporters. Citrus packing houses were added because of their affiliation with regional citrus marketing cooperatives.

A total of 236 questionnaires were mailed and 211 were returned, a response rate of 89 percent. Almost 70 percent of these respondents reported use of brands. These 144 cooperatives are listed in the directory using 1,016 brands.

Mention of company and brand names in this publication does not signify endorsement over other companies' products and services.

Cooperative Brands

Karen J. Spatz and Bruce J. Reynolds

A trademark or brand is a name and/or design used by firms to identify their products and to distinguish them from products supplied or manufactured by others. The benefits of branding include differentiating a product to increase consumer perception of its value. Consumer confidence in the quality and reliability of a brand can lead to increased loyalty and a premium price.

This directory was first published in 1977 and is in its third edition. Previous editions confined their surveys to processed food products. Yet, in addition to processed foods, cooperatives market under trademarks all types of products, such as fresh fruits and vegetables, grains, and farm supplies. This new edition has been expanded to include all of the aforementioned types of products. Furthermore, the revised directory includes information about the legal status and cooperative use of brands with respect to registration and licensing in both the United States and overseas.

Registration is necessary to maintain certain property rights to a trademark. A brand used in interstate commerce can usually be registered with the U.S. Patent and Trademark office. In addition, some States provide registration and legal protection for trademarks that are not sold in interstate commerce, but this directory did not survey this type of status for cooperative brands. Opportunities to register a brand and obtain property rights are available in many foreign countries. Foreign registrations can be particularly important for exporters who invest in market promotion.

A trademark licensing agreement legally permits someone other than the owner of a registered trademark to use it. A brand might be licensed to others for revenues and to expand recognition of the trademark if the quality of the product marketed can be guaranteed to meet certain quality requirements.

Licensing can be an important form of legal protection that enables cooperatives to contract with other firms to pack or sell member products without risk of losing or compromising their trademark rights. Cooperatives not only license their brand but also are licensees of brands that belong to others.

Cooperatives sometimes use different brands for different markets. For example, fruits sold fresh might differ from fruits sold to the industrial market for further processing. The cooperative might choose to use a different brand to prevent confusion by the buyers. Cooperatives often specialize in one product such as citrus but might also process the fruit to make juice, drinks, and processed fruit products. Several cooperatives have a wide array of products ranging from farm supplies to processed food.

Table 1 shows how many cooperatives sell branded products in each of these categories. A total is not provided because several cooperatives market products in more than one category. Fresh fruits, with 57 cooperatives reporting brands, have the largest number. Dairy products came next with 26 cooperatives marketing brands. The largest nonfood category is animal feeds with 14.

Table 2 shows the number of brands in each category. Fresh fruit is the largest category with 327 brands. Dairy products, fresh and processed vegetables, and processed fruit are the next largest categories with 141, 78, and 77 brands, respectively. The nonfood category with the largest number of brands is animal feeds and additives with 120 brands. Seeds are the next largest nonfood category with 26 brands.

Cooperatives market their brands to retail, food service, and industrial trade. In section 2 of this directory, a brand not marketed to retail outlets but to food service and/or industrial trade is marked with an asterisk. There are 109 brands marked as such.

Of the 1,016 reported brands, 859 are registered (84 percent). Registration was also tabulated by commodity (table 2). Because cooperatives use the same brand for different categories, the total number of brands in table 2 is greater than 859. Cooperatives also reported if they had applied for registration of a brand.

Cooperatives also license their brands to others and are licensees of brands. Sixteen cooperatives reported licensing their brands to domestic companies, 18 license a brand from another company or cooperative, and 17 of these are under a nonexclusive agreement. A nonexclusive agreement enables a brand to be licensed to more than one company for similar products. Under an exclusive agreement a brand is licensed to just one company for a particular product. The one exclusive agreement in the directory is for the Donald Duck brand used for juice products by Citrus World.

Cooperatives also register and license brands in foreign markets but not to the same extent as in the domestic market. Fifty-nine cooperatives, or 42 percent, reported registering their brands overseas. Cooperatives are also less active in foreign licensing, as only seven license to foreign companies while two license their brands from foreign companies.

The first section of this directory is an index by type of product. The second is an alphabetical listing, including the name and address of each cooperative and its brands and the products marketed under each brand. The third is an alphabetical listing of brands with its producer cooperative.

U.S. Department of Agriculture
Agricultural Cooperative Service

P.O. Box 96576

Washington, D.C. 20090-6576

Agricultural Cooperative Service (ACS) provides research, management, and educational assistance to cooperatives to strengthen the economic position of farmers and other rural residents. It works directly with cooperative leaders and Federal and State agencies to improve organization, leadership, and operation of cooperatives and to give guidance to further development.

The agency (1) helps farmers and other rural residents develop cooperatives to obtain supplies and services at lower cost and to get better prices for products they sell; (2) advises rural residents on developing existing resources through cooperative action to enhance rural living; (3) helps cooperatives improve services and operating efficiency; (4) informs members, directors, employees, and the public on how cooperatives work and benefit their members and their communities; and (5) encourages international cooperative programs.

ACS publishes research and educational materials and issues Farmer Cooperatives magazine. All programs and activities are conducted on a nondiscriminatory basis, without regard to race, creed, color, sex, age, marital status, handicap, or national origin.
